SUNDOWN, SON UP

AND SO, THE NEXT MORNING...

"And STAY away from my blackberry patch," Blackie Crow fiercely warned Bertie and Billie Bird, as he chased them off.

"YOUR blackberry patch?" exclaimed the angry Bertie. "WE found this patch last year!"

"Well, I found it THIS year!" Blackie retorted. "Now it's mine, so keep out!"

With this warning, Blackie flew back to guard the blackberry patch, leaving the two birds to mope on the bank of a small stream. Suddenly, a wet brown head poked out of the water.

"Hi!" greeted a friendly little beaver. "My name's Splashy. That crow wouldn't let me eat any berries, either. He pecked me on the head until I left the patch."

Bertie and Billie introduced themselves to the friendly little beaver. They told Splashy about how Blackie was always bullying others smaller than himself.

"We should teach that selfish crow a lesson he won't forget," exclaimed Splashy.

"But he's so big!" Billie exclaimed.

"My papa once told me that brawn doesn't count as much as brains," declared the beaver. "We can outwit that big crow."

"How?" they both asked anxiously.

"I found something floating down the stream today that gave me an idea," said Splashy, "but I'll need your help!"

The beaver explained his plan to the two birds, and they giggled with delight.

"I don't know how you'll do it," Bertie chuckled, "but we'll be glad to help."

So the two brothers left Splashy and flew to the nearby blackberry patch.

"I thought I told you to stay away," Blackie snapped, when he saw the birds.

"We came to see if the DREADFUL M-A-A

M-A-A caught you yet," explained Bertie.

The Dreadful WHAT?" asked Blackie.

"The Dreadful M-A-A M-A-A," said Billie. "Didn't you know this berry patch is haunted?"

"H-HAUNTED?" stuttered the shaking Blackie. "Oh, you're just trying to scare me," he added, recovering.

"Oh, no," Bertie protested. "We just want to see the Dreadful M-a M-a give you what you deserve!"

"Here he comes now, and he's after YOU, Blackie," yelled Billie as he heard some bushes rustling.

"Y-You aren't going to frighten me with gh-ghost stories," quivered Blackie.

Just then, a low mournful sound came from the bushes. "M-A-A M-A-A! M-A-A M-A-A!" cried the eerie voice.

And then Blackie was pelted with stones, which came from the bushes, too!

"I'm getting out of here," screamed the terrified crow. "This blackberry patch is haunted!"

As the frightened Blackie quickly flew away, Splashy came chuckling from his hiding place in the bushes.

"We know that you threw the stones," exclaimed Bertie to Splashy, "but what in the world made that weird noise? It even scared me!"

"Why, it was the Dreadful M-a M-a that I found floating in the stream today," the cunning beaver chuckled. "Or I should say the Dreadful MAMA DOLL!" he added as he pulled a child's doll from the bushes.

"Well, now we have the blackberries all to ourselves," laughed Bertie, "and I don't think the Dreadful M-a M-a will bother us at all."
